

What Is TOLES? Who Can Take It? How Many Levels Does It Include?

TOLES is a UK-based exam that can be taken by law students, lawyers and legal translators who aim to obtain an international certificate to test their legal English skills. TOLES exams consist of three levels: foundation, higher and advanced.

TOLES Exam Preparation Courses and Programs at Eastern Mediterranean University (EMU)

Third- and fourth-year law students at our university can choose from four field elective courses— ENGL 352, 353, 452, and 453—designed to prepare them for the TOLES Foundation exam. The Department of Translation and Interpretation students are also offered the TRAN 446 course, which prepares them for the international TOLES exams.

Additionally, the TOLES evening courses organised by the Eastern Mediterranean University Continuous Education Center are offered to all individuals aiming to work in the field of law. These courses last 60 hours and are conducted online and in-person, depending on demand. The courses are taught by English instructors who have developed expertise in the field of law, and they are held outside of regular working hours.

How TOLES Will Benefit You?

TOLES equips you with the vocabulary and grammar skills essential for Legal English, enabling you to draft cross-border contracts, analyze foreign court decisions, and build connections with international clients and authorities. Upon completing the TOLES courses, students are well-prepared to successfully take the TOLES exams. They also receive a Legal English certificate from our faculty, which can open new doors as they begin their professional careers. Many of our students have passed the exams with success and secured job opportunities at reputable companies. The TOLES certificate is different from other English certificates and gives you an advantage over those who don't have it. It is highly sought after by law firms for recruitment and career advancement. The TOLES certificate is one of the most important qualifications to obtain, especially for individuals who want to work in international law firms.
